
From: gremlin9 <gremlin9@tpg.com.au>
Sent: Thursday, 4 February 2021 2:06 AM
To: SLPSConsultations
Cc: 'Sta Bourke'
Subject: Re: Have your say - review of non-assigned amateur regulatory arrangements - The simple submission

Hallo,

Requirements to obtain an amateur ham licence have been decreasing over many years now. The quality of new operators may be commonly now, inversely proportional to these requirements.

Do we need more, barely qualified people to represent our all Australian ham community in the world ham communities or do we need to lower standards again to promote the licencing revenue.

We do represent Australia on world ham airways, we are being proud to do so over many years and we did work hard to earn this privilege.

Ham radio and the CB radio or other enthusiasts are commonly on the very opposite side of not only the frequency spectrum but also on the opposite side of the quality of individuals to represent Australia on Ham radio ways.

This trend has started when the CW requirement was dropped.

If you want it – you need to work hard for it. Only then you can represent the value of the obtained privilege – the Australian ham radio license.

I am very strongly against relaxing of any ham radio licensing requirements.

With 50+ years' experience.

Regards,
Janusz Bogdanski
VK2FEX (ex SP9FEX)