Subject: Australia's daily Alcohol toll: 15 deaths and 430 hospitalisations.

Message Body:

Society now tolerates approx. 3.3 million deaths worldwide annually from Alcohol, not to mention the health risks, domestic violence, and breakdown of the family unit associated with Alcohol, with not a care in the world, and still openly endorses, encourages, and promotes its use all over the world. The real criminals are those that have remained quiet about the harm associated with Alcohol, and/or defended its use. Alcohol kills more Australians than die on our roads here, and no one cares two hoots, and it seems society is quite willing to accept these deaths as just collateral damage in order to sustain an alcoholic drug use culture. Australia's daily Alcohol toll: 15 deaths and 430 hospitalisations... PER DAY!

Alcohol is the true scourge on society, and is by far the biggest drug problem in Australia, and in fact the world, but not a word is ever spoken about it and this needs to change. We can't keep burying our heads in the sand glorifying our own Alcohol drug use while ignoring the fact millions of people die every year from its use. Pretending it's not true or isn't happening is not helpful and the situation is only going to get worse. If the mantra of the Medical industry and the community in general is, "The Safety of Others is the Responsibility of Everyone", then why is everyone silent? In Australia a Coronial inquest was held into 6 deaths over 2 years at music festivals from 'party drugs', yet here Alcohol kills nearly 3 times that number every single day! ... not to mention the 430 hospitalisations every day, so when are we going to have an enquiry into the 5,500 odd alcohol related deaths that happen in Australia every year?. When are we going to see some sort of restrictions placed on Alcohol use??... probably never if the sanctimonious drunkards continue to run the show! More double standards! Alcohol has already normalised recreational drug use!
